In May, 1900, Honorable William E. Dodge, of New York, made provision for lectures before the students of Yale University, to be known as the "Yale Lectures on the Responsibilities of Citizenship" and to be on a "topic whose understanding will contribute to the formation of an intelligent public sentiment, of high standards of the duty of a Christian citizen, and of habits of action to give effect to these sentiments and these standards."

Having been honored by selection to deliver the first course of these lectures I have felt that it was fitting to present a few plain, simple, commonplace truths in respect to those responsibilities, thus laying, as it were, a foundation upon which succeeding lecturers might in a more ambitious way develop some particular form of responsibility, or some particular appeal to noble action. With this in view I have prepared the following lectures.
