PREFACE.

This collection of stories is designed to supplement the teacher's instruction in ethics, and to furnish profitable and attractive reading either in the home or the school.

In a few cases when it has not seemed possible to present a moral truth in the guise of an interesting story, incident or poem, a plain and direct homily has been used for that purpose.

An attempt has been made to adapt the reading matter to children of different stages of advancement. It is believed that suitable reading will be found in this book for children of the advanced primary, as well as for two or three grades higher.

Thanks are due the authors and publishers named throughout the book, for their courteous kindness in allowing their stories and publications to be used.

JULIA M. DEWEY.

LOWELL, Mass.
