An ox-drawn tumbrel passes through the gates of the stockade, on its way to the nearby fields.

Acknowledgment.

THANKS are due to Dr. William H. Martin, Principal of the Troup Junior High School of New Haven and to the six teachers of the social studies for the effective coöperation which made possible an experiment of this character; to the authorities of Yale University Press for their generous support of the undertaking; and to Professor Frank E. Spaulding, Chairman of the Department of Education, Yale University, for friendly criticism and counsel as the work progressed. Whatever success has attended these efforts to evaluate the historical motion picture is due in no small measure to their keen interest in the project and to their painstaking efforts.
