NOTICE.

THE following pages have been compiled simply to aid pupils in their progress, but not to supply the place of oral instruction, or to supersede class-books in ordinary use. It is recommended that the various sections should, in turn, be made familiar to the memory of young students by frequent repetition at stated and regular intervals. By this means, if steadily persevered in, the greater part of the contents may be permanently remembered.

All who have had experience in teaching must be aware of the irksomeness with which most young persons receive instruction, until their minds have begun to store up facts and the ideas connected with them, and of the awakened interest and intelligence exhibited by the same minds after such knowledge has been acquired.

The advantage of possessing, in a small compass, the more important names, dates, and facts which deserve to be fixed in the memory, is sufficiently obvious. Hitherto it has been necessary to consult various works, some of which are not readily accessible, in order to obtain the requisite information. To obviate this difficulty, the compiler has been induced to prepare this little book; and she trusts that her efforts, the result of much care and practical experience, may prove successful in abridging the labour of the teacher, and in rendering study more agreeable and beneficial to the pupil.
