To my Wife
Jessie Knight Jordan

When man shall rise to manhood's destiny,
When our slow-toddling race shall be full grown,
Deep in each human heart a chamber lone
Of holies, holiest shall builded be,
And each man for himself must hold the key.
Each man must kindle his own altar fires,
Each burn an offering of his own desires,
And each, at last, his own High Priest shall be!

PREFATORY NOTE.

This little allegory was first printed under the title of "The Story of the Innumerable Company." The present publishers are indebted to Messrs. Whitaker & Ray, of San Francisco, for the privilege of reprinting it, the author having taken the opportunity to make some additions to the text.
