DEDICATION.

To the numerous throng of good men and women, throughout the world, who have unjustly suffered from slander and defamation of character, this work is dedicated by their fellow sufferer,

THOMAS D. WORRALL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 1884.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry should be supported by a valid receipt or invoice to ensure transparency and accountability.

2. In the second section, the author outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze data. This includes both qualitative and quantitative approaches, as well as the use of advanced statistical software to identify trends and patterns.

3. The third section provides a detailed overview of the results obtained from the study. It highlights the key findings and discusses their implications for the field. The author notes that the data suggests a significant correlation between the variables studied, which may have practical applications in the industry.

4. Finally, the document concludes with a series of recommendations for future research. The author suggests that further exploration is needed to understand the underlying mechanisms of the observed phenomena and to develop more effective strategies based on the findings.

PREFACE.

"Dicam sine cunctatione quod sentio."

Believing, as we firmly do, that more sorrow, suffering, undeserved disgrace and ruin, are caused by slander, than by all other crimes put together, we have written a book on the subject. We have used no mild language, in thus writing; indeed, we fail to find words sufficiently expressive to paint the slanderer as black as we find him.

If we have proved that slander causes more misery than theft, more than arson, and sometimes, even more than murder, then we are justified in saying that the slanderer is worse than a thief, worse than an incendiary, bad as a murderer.

Our readers will belong to two classes, those who have suffered from slander, those who have not. To the former, the nervous language we have used in the following chapters will be deemed none too severe, indeed, many, like ourself, will deem it richly deserved. This class of readers will be among the most intelligent, learned, honorable and useful of their race; men with sufficient honesty of purpose to speak the truth, regardless of consequences; men whose commanding position, personal worth and successes in life have been sufficient to excite the envy and jealousy of their contemporaries.

The purest and best of men, in all ages, have been those who have suffered most at the hands of the defamer and slanderer.

The second class of readers; men who have never been slandered; who know not what it is to writhe in pain over a bleeding reputation; men who know not
