DEDICATION.

I am not a poet, and I like best to say my thoughts in prose. But like Shakespeare "I have immortal longings," and like everyone else I am influenced by those I love. And—well Someone thought these songs worth while, so I dug them out of every conceivable corner of my desk and sent them to the Printer Man. Because of this weakminded confession, may the critic I fear, discharge his literary canon in some other direction. Amen!

Margaret Blake Robinson.

GLORY.

Come out, it's Spring! oh come, oh come!
I am sixty feet high
And the sight in my eye
Is the sight of the moon and the stars and the sky!
And I feel—oh I feel
That I'm dipped to the heel
In the joy of God's joy!—
And it gives me no fear
That I wrestle with God for the power of a cheer
And am utterly dumb!
