NOTE

THIS book assumes the positions which were dealt with at greater length in a previous one, The Philosophy of Christian Experience; and reference is made to that previous volume here and there. It is not meant, however, that those who are unacquainted with The Philosophy of Christian Experience will be at any loss in following the present pages. But they will have to take for granted certain things which are in the former volume more fully drawn out.

Incorporated in the following pages are some passages from papers which have at different times appeared in The Expositor and The Christian World. My thanks are due to the Editors of these journals for their kind permission to reprint.

My thanks are due to the Rev. David Caird for his careful reading of the proofs.
