Foreword

HERE is no tribute of eloquence to Alma Mater so genuine or so lasting as the songs we sing to her. After the mass meeting with its fiery speeches is over, after the cap night bonfire has burned out; after we have banqueted and toasted, it is the songs we have sung that remain longest with us, renewing our enthusiasm and loyalty. There is some song associated with every activity of college days, like a kind of perfume, and when the old songs are sung the mind is stirred to a thousand memories. It is, then, a great pleasure to possess a book like this in which one may find so much more than the mere songs which are printed here; more intimately than any other relic of college days do these pages record old times, old friends, and all those fine associations which make up the sum of the proud years spent at Michigan.
