DECENNIAL RECORD

OF THE

Class of 1898

OF THE

COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY IN THE
CITY OF NEW YORK

PUBLISHED FOR THE DECENNIAL REUNION
HELD ON MARCH THE SEVENTH
1908

PREFACE.

The class of 1898 of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, was the first to be graduated under the four-year curriculum. This circumstance alone might be considered sufficient cause for a celebration. Now that ten years have elapsed since graduation, it seems doubly fitting that a reunion of its members should be held.

The idea of having a decennial reunion is one that has for some time been favorably discussed by various members of the class. Definite plans to organize the reunion were made last fall, when a committee was appointed by the Class President to make the necessary arrangements. It was then decided not only to hold a banquet, but also to try the experiment of publishing a record of the class since graduation. After some deliberation it was thought best to make the record a purely professional one and to omit all personal information, such as that relating to marriage, etc.

Answers to a circular letter with ten statistical questions were finally received from all except four men in the class. Three of these were men whose addresses it seemed impossible to ascertain.

Due perhaps to a false sense of modesty, some of the class have failed, in spite of several requests, to make their records as complete as was desired. On the other hand we have thought it best to omit some of the answers given in order to make the record uniform. All positions held at the present time are inserted in the record. Of former positions only those of importance, such as instructorships or attending positions to hospitals, have been included. A list of former positions, such as that of clinical assistant, often held but a short time, seemed superfluous. Membership in various societies has for the same reason been omitted.

It is hoped that our reunion, with its class record, will tend to strengthen and renew personal and professional relations between the members of our class. If the efforts of the committee have contributed to bring about this result, we shall certainly consider that our time and thought have been well expended.
