This work is able and ingenious, but vitiated all through by its foundation in the Aristotelian Paradox. Its "Consciousness-in-general" is the Universal in the Particular, and hence a mere abstraction, or "pure potentiality" (p. 175). There could be no more striking proof of the necessity of a reform in the Theory of Universals. Yet there is much truth in the book, too, and it deserves praise for being an original attempt at construction.
