This little work was never intended originally to meet the eye of the Public; the writer merely prepared it as a source of social amusement to such of his friends as are of a literary turn. They however resolved, on the perusal of it, to pitch-fork him rather uncerimoniously into print, notwithstanding his serious remonstrances; he therefore had no alternative but to yield passive obedience: thus it happens that he has now to cast himself on the tender mercies of the literate portion of the public. He says "literate portion," as he is thoroughly convinced that none but such can appreciate (if there be anything worthy of appreciation), and peruse it with anything like real interest, as it is altogether written on grammatical principles.

He must not forget to entreat his friends to pardon him for sacrificing "Delicacy" at the "shrine of Truth."

THOMAS RUSSELL,

May Hill P. O.
