Figure 1: A scatter plot showing the relationship between the number of children (X-axis, 0-10) and the number of books read (Y-axis, 0-10). The data points are: (0, 0), (1, 1), (2, 2), (3, 3), (4, 4), (5, 5), (6, 6), (7, 7), (8, 8), (9, 9), (10, 10). A solid line of best fit passes through the origin and the point (10, 10).

PREFACE.

BOTH in practice and in private life I have frequently been asked by anxious parents, "When will baby begin to cut his teeth?" and, "Which will be the next tooth to come through the gum?"

I therefore resolved to print as simple an explanation as possible of this subject, so that any mother or nurse might readily learn the order in which the teeth of her little charge should show themselves.

Although my original intention was to confine this little work to that subject, I have been led to touch on several other points connected with the teeth; and in order to be explicit I have throughout carefully avoided any approach to technicality.

THE TEETH

IN INFANCY AND AGE.

“CUTTING” THE TEETH, AND THE TIMES
OF THEIR APPEARANCE.

THERE are few matters connected with early life so little generally understood as that of the eruption, or “cutting” of the Teeth.

One of the first anxieties the young mother experiences with respect to her little offspring is occasioned by this most troublesome progression, and numerous questions are then asked relative to the time of appearance of her little one's teeth, and the order in which that appearance should take place.
