INTRODUCTION. By JOHN SPARGO	I
CHAPTER
I. INTRODUCTORY	7
Socialism a force to be reckoned with in America; conflicting definitions; is there a consistent Socialist movement in the United States? Two parties recognized by international Socialism. Sources of information; the party literature and leaders; non-official Socialist organizations and sympathizers. Subject of volume the belief, demands and methods of American Socialism.
II. OUTLINE OF MARXIAN SOCIALISM	16
The definition of Socialism. I. The Marxian doctrine:—The economic interpretation of history; the class struggle; the crisis theory; the breakdown of capitalism; Marx's pure economics; the theory of surplus value; application to crisis theory, class struggle and cataclysm. II. The Marxian program: ultimate; immediate. III. The Marxian method of attainment.
III. THE HISTORY OF SOCIALISM IN THE UNITED STATES	33
Utopian experiments; immigration of German radicals; native labor movement. Formation of Socialist Labor Party; conflict with the Anarchists; political activity; relations with labor unions. Later Socialist movements. Schism in the S. L. P. Formation of the Socialist Party. Its political fortunes; attitude to organized labor; the Socialist press; the party leaders. Professed Marxism of the party.
IV. THE ECONOMIC INTERPRETATION OF HISTORY	55
Acceptance by American Socialists; attitude of economists outside the Socialist lines. Exaggerations of the doctrine: fatalism; materialism. Effect of doctrine on Socialist policy.
V. THE CLASS STRUGGLE	62
Basis of American Socialism; various interpretations of it among Socialists; effects on Socialist policy.

- VI. THE THEORY OF SURPLUS VALUE 71
 Not an essential of Socialism; attitude of American Socialists to theory; revisionism; relation of doctrine to theory of marginal utility; the great contradiction; the iron law of wages; inductive demonstration of surplus value by American Socialists; the place of theory in the Socialist movement.
- VII. THE THEORY OF CRISES 84
 American Socialism based on the general rather than the special explanation; unimportance of differences of opinion on the subject
- VIII. THE BREAKDOWN OF THE CAPITALIST SYSTEM 90
 As a philosophical dogma; as an economic conclusion. The attacks of the Revisionists; modification by idea of conscious choice. The concentration of capital. The proletarianization of the middle class. The increasing exploitation of the workers. The breakdown theory ideological rather than mechanical. Two opinions among American Socialists: the revolutionist and the constructivist.
- IX. THE ULTIMATE ECONOMIC PROGRAM 118
PART I. The Details of Expropriation.
 Indefiniteness of Socialist official utterances regarding the details of ultimate program; this indefiniteness consistent with Marxian principles — all ultimate details confessedly tentative. The extent of socialization. The process of expropriation.
- X. THE ULTIMATE ECONOMIC PROGRAM 129
PART II. Production and Distribution.
 Socialist organization to be a development from present forms; the voluntary coöperative; the labor union; the state-owned industry. Local autonomy; relation of industrial and political powers. Incentive, assignment and remuneration the chief problems. Equality of nature and income; competition in the Socialist state.
 Incentive: — pleasure in work; joint interest; competition for material rewards.
 Assignment: — differences in ability; distasteful work; Utopian suggestions; hesitancy to apply competitive principle; compulsory manual labor; competition in the Socialist commonwealth.
 Remuneration: — dividing-up; distribution according to needs; equality; right to the whole produce of labor; labor check system; unequal money wages. Commodity values under Socialism.
