The Visit to the Cells *.

The clock struck two. The Principal of the Grammer-School, Dr. Samuel Heinzerling, entered the school-court with all his own peculiar dignity, and slowly ascended the stairs.

Upon the steps he met the Beadle of the

^{*} The Latin word "Career" here translated "Cells" means, as used in Germany, literally "a school prison". The English reader must remember, that the German school system is very different from our own. Under that system a refractory pupil may be imprisoned for some days, in very grave cases even for weeks, by order of the head master, during which time his parents, or other friends, have to see that he is supplied with food.

School, who had already rung the bell, and was now about to betake himself to his own private domains, where there was a strange medley of domestic work to be got through.

"Nothaing haappened, Quadlaar?" asked the Principal, acknowledging the humble salutation of his vassal with a lordly bend of his head.

"No, Sir, nothing."

"Haas the libraarian not decaided yaet about the books in quaestion?"

"No, Sir."

"Good. Theen go over again to daay, and ainquire how their matter staands. One thaing more. Praamaner* Rompf has been absent a whole daay. Call at hais raesidaence, and faind out aif hae is really aill; I aalmost doubt...."
